The War Today...

If we accept the view of German military experts, the Allied attack on the northern shoulder of the Belgian bulge is the start of a major counter-offensive which is calculated "to hit the German armies decisively in a big pincer operation".

That is to say, the Berlin view is that Gen. Eisenhower is bent on driving a wedge southward to join the salient which Gen. Patton has so sensationally thrust northward in the Bastogne zone. This would close Nazi Marshal Von Rundstedt's avenue of retreat from the western part of the bulge and a large force of Germans would be trapped.

Well, that's a delectable morsel to roll under the Allied tongue, and certainly it's our ambition to inflict just such a disaster on the Hitlerites. However, while it's all right to recognize this fact, we mustn't overlook the stern realities of the present moment.

The battle of the bulge, which bids fair to be one of the great and bloody engagements of the war, hasn't by any means hit its peak. It is growing in intensity hourly but it's in such a state of flux that no man at this moment can forecast developments, although there's no doubt that the Allies will win ultimately.

Probably it's true that the long range objective of Gen. Hodges' First Army counter-attack, in which British elements are participating, is to join up with Patton's drive from the south and so create a sack. However, as pointed out in yesterday's column, Hodges' initial purpose is to relieve pressure on Patton and to disrupt any possibility of Von Rundstedt breaking out through that northern shoulder of the bulge and reaching the all-important Allied communications center of Liege, and perhaps the port of Antwerp, upon which Eisenhower is so largely dependent.

Whether Eisenhower is going "all out" in his present operations remains to be seen. One would expect him to make his maximum effort when Marshal Von Rundstedt had fully committed his forces to the battle of the bulge, for the Allied commander's purpose is to annihilate as many of the enemy as possible. Von Rundstedt has been moving fresh troops and armor into the bulge, and it may be that the field is set for the showdown.

In any event, a terrible conflict is developing. The fighting has been particularly fierce in the Bastogne sector where Von Rundstedt has concentrated troops and has been counter-attacking incessantly in an effort to halt the Patton drive, which has constituted the Nazi leader's greatest single threat at the moment.

FIREMEN ARE OVERCOME AT LAUNDRY FIRE

Chemical Fumes At Blaze Send Six To Hospital For Treatment

Two city firemen are in the Central Clinic today and another is confined to his home as a result of a fire which caused slight damage to the American Laundry, S. Broadway, at 9:12 a. m. today.

Fireman Clarence Wright, 215 E. Seventh st., and Captain Ted Yarwood, 411 Jennings ave., are confined to the hospital as a result of inhaling fumes from a supply of chloride powder which became overheated when the flames reached the second story of the building through small ventilating shaft.

Fireman Curt Yarian, N. Ellsworth ave., was treated at the clinic and released, but he is confined to his home. The fumes caused severe coughing spells and internal disorder. Chief Vincent Malloy said three other firemen were affected by the fumes, but not enough to merit medical attention. They were examined at the hospital and released.

They included Chief Malloy, and Auxiliary Firemen Lawrence Hinckley and Wilford Thomas.

The fire itself, which caused little property damage, started when a tub of clothing in the process of being deodorized, ignited and exploded. The blaze soared up through the ventilating outlet into the second story where supplies including the chemicals, are kept.

Russell Gibbs, an owner of the laundry, said practically no damage was done to the building itself but some supplies and materials suffered water damage.

The firemen encountered the chloride fumes when they made their way to the second floor to extinguish the blaze. A sprinkling system within the building prevented what might have been serious damage, the chief said.

LISBON MAN DIES IN BOMBER CRASH

LISBON, Jan. 5.—Staff Sgt. William V. Tucker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tucker of Pittsburgh formerly of Lisbon, was killed in an airplane crash in Europe Dec. 3. His family has been notified. The death of the youth follows by seven months the death in a similar crash at Jacksonville, Fla., of a younger brother, Pvt. Joseph Tucker, who was killed while in training with the Air forces.

Staff Sgt. Tucker, a graduate of David Anderson High school here in 1939, had served three years with the Air Forces, having been overseas for nearly two years. He was a member of the Ninth Air Force and had won the Air medal. Two Oak Leaf clusters, a Silver star and a Presidential citation ribbon.

30 German Prisoners Work at Ohio Hospital

CAMBRIDGE, Jan. 5.—Thirty German prisoners of war arrived at Fletcher General hospital today to provide additional labor. They are the first of a group of 150 prisoners who will be transferred here from Camp Perry, O.

Manpower Control Fails To Scare Salem Men Into War Work

Although recent stringent manpower control threats by national officials have spurred applications for war jobs by 4-Fs and non-essential workers in many areas, officials at the Salem United States Employment Service office said today that local response has been very disappointing.

Increase in applications are reported in Youngstown, Warren, Allentown and several other neighboring communities but the change here has been slight.

He was a member of the Ninth Air Force and had won the Air medal, two Oak Leaf clusters, a Silver star and a Presidential citation ribbon.

Cleveland reported an influx of job applications. Louisville, Ky., said more than 2,000 4-Fs registered for munitions plant jobs this week—roughly half our shortage made up in one day. Charleston, West Virginia, said about 10 per cent of the 24,000 monthly uses placements were applied for war jobs by non-essential industries, Arthur S. Johnston, employment manager, said. The 4-F response is practically negligible.

"Serious" and "acute" manpower shortages still were reported in some states by War Manpower commission officials.

In Cincinnati, the barring of horse and dog racing bettered manpower conditions. Several bookmakers registered for war jobs, said Manpower Director John M. Baker, and are "taking in good graces."

Details of the accident over Europe told of two bombers crashing in mid-air, exploding and falling into the sea. Patrols and rescue ships were unable to find any survivors, the War department said.

Sgt. Tucker was expecting to be furloughed and returned to this country in December, but a change in plans necessitated his staying another month, his mother said.

Besides the parents another son Pvt. Robert Tucker, serving in the Pacific, a brother John, at home and three sisters survive.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—President Roosevelt said today his next meeting with Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Marshal Stalin will take place after his inauguration Jan. 20.

He made this statement smilingly to a news conference and added the meeting will differ as to agenda and other plans from previous meetings at Casablanca, Teheran, Quebec and Washington.

Kidding, he said that whether the meeting would be held at the North or South pole depends upon ice conditions.

He said he did not know whether other Allied leaders than the Big Three will attend and that the public will not know whether Secretary of State Stettinius will attend until a week after the conference is over.

Asked whether any significance was attached to the presentation to him yesterday by the Earl of Halifax, British ambassador, of a book, "The English Spirit," and recent editorial criticism of Allied political policies, Mr. Roosevelt smiled and said he was taking the book with him to the pole.

U. S., RUSSIA DISAGREE ON POLISH ISSUE

Relations Are Strained As Moscow Recognizes New Lublin Regime

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The United States today reiterated its recognition of the Polish exile government despite Russian recognition of the new Polish regime at Lublin as a "provisional government."

The State department announced in reply to inquiries that it had received advance notice from the Russian government of the Soviet action.

Asked for additional comment, a department spokesman referred to a statement issued by Secretary of State Stettinius last Monday and said there was nothing to add to it.

In that statement Stettinius asserted: "This government continues to maintain formal diplomatic relations with the Polish government in exile in London."

Soviet Ambassador Gromyko told the State department at 4 p.m. yesterday but officials declined to say whether he then brought the advance notice of today's action in Moscow.

Not Unexpected

Although Russia's action was not unexpected here, it was obvious that the diplomatic reaction was "the worst has happened."

No immediate way to break the deadlock appeared.

The general view in Washington was that Stalin felt he could wait no longer in recognizing the Lublin regime because of the imminence of a great Russian recognition action freezing the worst split to date in the ranks of the United Nations.

A total of 958,000 tons were dropped by American planes. It was announced by Lt. Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, commander of the U. S. Strategic Air Force, while the RAF said its bombers accounted for 588,000 tons.

The U. S. Eighth Air Force based in Britain played a major role, accounting for 450,000 tons. The over-all figure also included operations by Allied planes in the Mediterranean.

The RAF said British planes took sorties and destroyed 15,318 enemy aircraft, both in the air and on the ground, at a loss of 9,274 U. S. planes. Spaatz' review of 1944 operations was very disappointing."

Increase in applications are reported in Youngstown, Warren, Allentown and several other neighboring communities but the change here has been slight.

John Bricker Suited Ohio

When public opinion research revealed in the spring of 1944 that John W. Bricker suited Ohioans better than the governors of other states suited their constituents, science confirmed what sentiment already knew.

The steadily larger majorities which he piled up in his three successful races for the governorship of this state were popular testimony to his relentless and intelligent efforts to improve the quality of state government. His emergence last year as presidential timber and the great personal triumph he won by his vigorous campaign, first for the nomination, then for the Republican ticket when the nomination was bestowed on Gov. Dewey as the more expedient candidate for the presidency, established his national stature. Gov. Bricker has become a leading public figure, and his friends throughout the country hope he may be active in the months ahead.

Frank J. Lausche, who now steps into the governorship as a relative newcomer to state politics, has the advantage of taking over the position with Ohio's affairs in good order. He has, also, the disadvantage of succeeding an administration which operated so smoothly that his regime will be expected to attain the same standard. Mr. Lausche is fortunate in the fact that he goes into office with public confidence already established in his integrity as an individual.

As to the purposes and complexion of his administration, he must interpret his mandate for himself. It is to be hoped that he may adopt his predecessor's forthright insistence on being alert against the dangers inherent in an all-powerful central government; that he may resist the officeholder's temptation to be extravagant with other people's money; that he may be as fortunate in his appointments as Gov. Bricker was in his appointments.

Ohioans want to believe that in 1946 if public opinion researchers ask them what they think of their governor they will still be as far above the national average in satisfaction as they were in 1944. They wish John Bricker well as he steps down, and they wish Frank Lausche well as he steps up. Politics aside, where politics should be at such times, what Ohio wants is governors who reflect the high aspirations and honest convictions of the state at its best. It had such a governor in John Bricker and hopes to be as well satisfied with Frank Lausche.

New Element of Urgency

Official directives on manpower for war production and military needs assume that the supply is as inexhaustible as the demand. For reasons not yet made clear, the demand now is being increased, though the supply is in doubt.

Naturally, everything possible will be done to give the armed services and war production what is needed, but it is not certain that the result will be enough to satisfy stated requirements. Thus, if deferred farm workers are taken into the armed services at the expense of food production in 1945, the result could not be called satisfactory.

In the official thinking which has led to the conclusion that deferred farm workers between 18 and 25 and men classified as unfit for military service must be drafted, there apparently is some new element of urgency not visible to the public. The same element seems to have prompted most of the recent official statements on the necessity for increasing the existing rate of war production.

It cannot be explained wholly by the resurgence of German striking power on the western front. The resurgence, itself, needs explanation. Since the matter has been left to speculation, it is tempting to speculate that something has changed the official outlook more drastically than it could have been changed by a German counter-attack. Speculation turns to the possibility that the shape of the war against the Axis may have been altered drastically in some way connected with the failure of a Russian winter offensive to materialize in Poland—failure which may be permitting Germany to shift its forces to the western front and to strike in vastly greater force than was believed possible when Gen. Eisenhower said victory in 1944 was assured if everybody did his part.

You Do the Best You Can

President Roosevelt has interposed a cool thought in the hot anxieties of his countrymen over the post-war world that isn't going to be run on the American plan after all.

You do the best you can, he observed in his first press conference of the new year. He might have added that meanwhile your allies and also your enemies are doing the best they can.

Apropos of the criticism and violent reaction from criticism which lately seem to be the characteristic of United Nations diplomatic relations, Mr. Roosevelt also might have pointed out that Americans consistently have been better critics than performers in international relations. As a nation we never have been restrained by the admonition not to judge lest we be judged—and thereafter we have resented the judgment.

Not only that, but Americans have arrogated to themselves authority on moral behavior in particular which is not recognized by their allies in this war and was not recognized in World War I. They have questioned the morality of other governments on occasions when the morality of their own government was not above reproach.

Written In History

By James Thrasher

"We have stopped cold everything that has been thrown at us from the north, east, south, west," said the Christmas edition of a little paper put out by one of the encircled American outfits at Bastogne. "How effectively this was done will be written in history, not alone in the history of our glorious units, but in the history of the world."

These are confident words, but they are not conceded. They are the words of men who knew what they had suffered, and they had accomplished by their suffering. And as nearly as one can predict, they are true.

It must be a solemn and glorious thing to realize that circumstances have brought one to the point where his actions may serve to guide or direct or inspire the lives of men in generations unborn and un dreamt of. And surely it must be a realization granted only to a few.

It is doubtful that the Greeks at Thermopylae, the nobles at Runnymede, the farmers of Lexington or the citizens' army before the Bastille could have realized the impact that one day in their lives would have upon history.

But the men of Bastogne knew the stakes for which they expended their courage and their blood. They stopped the enemy at a critical moment, and did it with an unflinching bravery which is in the highest tradition of great soldiers. The thanks and glory they receive will be a meager recompence.

Have that rosebud mouth, an ad advises the girls. And get nipped in the bud!

Dramatic Story About a Surgeon

LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

MODERN surgery came to maturity just 90 years ago, in the spring of 1865 in the ancient and very Scotch city of Glasgow, when there were many accidents he tried the application of it to compound fractures and managed to save limbs that would otherwise have been lost. Soon the knowledge was world wide and modern surgery was started on its brilliant path. Modern surgeons have improved Lister's technique, but his fundamental ideas still prevail.

He did not know, the control of which completely baffled him.

We know now, of course, that it was due to the entrance in the wound of germs, which are everywhere in the air, on the instruments he uses, on the ligatures, dressings, hands of operator and assistants. These can be destroyed by boiling the instruments, sterilizing the dressings, and cleansing the hands and the patient's skin, but of that our surgeons of 1865 were entirely unaware.

Experience With Garbage

Joseph Lister happened to stumble on Pasteur's description of minute organisms which caused putrefaction. But it was really the experience of the city of Carlisle in its destroying of the smell of its sewage and garbage by the use of carbolic acid that influenced him most. In the cold and icy winter of 1865 in Glasgow when there were many accidents he tried the application of it to compound fractures and managed to save limbs that would otherwise have been lost. Soon the knowledge was world wide and modern surgery was started on its brilliant path. Modern surgeons have improved Lister's technique, but his fundamental ideas still prevail.

The story is a dramatic one well and accurately told by Miss Truax. No person who in any way claims to understand the modern world can afford to be ignorant of it.

John Bricker Suited Ohio

When public opinion research revealed in the spring of 1944 that John W. Bricker suited Ohioans better than the governors of other states suited their constituents, science confirmed what sentiment already knew.

The steadily larger majorities which he piled up in his three successful races for the governorship of this state were popular testimony to his relentless and intelligent efforts to improve the quality of state government. His emergence last year as presidential timber and the great personal triumph he won by his vigorous campaign, first for the nomination, then for the Republican ticket when the nomination was bestowed on Gov. Dewey as the more expedient candidate for the presidency, established his national stature. Gov. Bricker has become a leading public figure, and his friends throughout the country hope he may be active in the months ahead.

Frank J. Lausche, who now steps into the governorship as a relative newcomer to state politics, has the advantage of taking over the position with Ohio's affairs in good order. He has, also, the disadvantage of succeeding an administration which operated so smoothly that his regime will be expected to attain the same standard. Mr. Lausche is fortunate in the fact that he goes into office with public confidence already established in his integrity as an individual.

As to the purposes and complexion of his administration, he must interpret his mandate for himself. It is to be hoped that he may adopt his predecessor's forthright insistence on being alert against the dangers inherent in an all-powerful central government; that he may resist the officeholder's temptation to be extravagant with other people's money; that he may be as fortunate in his appointments as Gov. Bricker was in his appointments.

Ohioans want to believe that in 1946 if public opinion researchers ask them what they think of their governor they will still be as far above the national average in satisfaction as they were in 1944. They wish John Bricker well as he steps down, and they wish Frank Lausche well as he steps up. Politics aside, where politics should be at such times, what Ohio wants is governors who reflect the high aspirations and honest convictions of the state at its best. It had such a governor in John Bricker and hopes to be as well satisfied with Frank Lausche.

New Element of Urgency

Official directives on manpower for war production and military needs assume that the supply is as inexhaustible as the demand. For reasons not yet made clear, the demand now is being increased, though the supply is in doubt.

Naturally, everything possible will be done to give the armed services and war production what is needed, but it is not certain that the result will be enough to satisfy stated requirements. Thus, if deferred farm workers are taken into the armed services at the expense of food production in 1946, the result could not be called satisfactory.

In the official thinking which has led to the conclusion that deferred farm workers between 18 and 25 and men classified as unfit for military service must be drafted, there apparently is some new element of urgency not visible to the public. The same element seems to have prompted most of the recent official statements on the necessity for increasing the existing rate of war production.

It cannot be explained wholly by the resurgence of German striking power on the western front. The resurgence, itself, needs explanation. Since the matter has been left to speculation, it is tempting to speculate that something has changed the official outlook more drastically than it could have been changed by a German counter-attack. Speculation turns to the possibility that the shape of the war against the Axis may have been altered drastically in some way connected with the failure of a Russian winter offensive to materialize in Poland—failure which may be permitting Germany to shift its forces to the western front and to strike in vastly greater force than was believed possible when Gen. Eisenhower said victory in 1944 was assured if everybody did his part.

You Do the Best You Can

President Roosevelt has interposed a cool thought in the hot anxieties of his countrymen over the post-war world that isn't going to be run on the American plan after all.

You do the best you can, he observed in his first press conference of the new year. He might have added that meanwhile your allies and also your enemies are doing the best they can.

Apropos of the criticism and violent reaction from criticism which lately seem to be the characteristic of United Nations diplomatic relations, Mr. Roosevelt also might have pointed out that Americans consistently have been better critics than performers in international relations. As a nation we never have been restrained by the admonition not to judge lest we be judged—and thereafter we have resented the judgment.

Not only that, but Americans have arrogated to themselves authority on moral behavior in particular which is not recognized by their allies in this war and was not recognized in World War I. They have questioned the morality of other governments on occasions when the morality of their own government was not above reproach.

Mr. Roosevelt's chief problem in foreign policy obviously is how to continue international negotiations—doing the best he can—and meanwhile to retain the confidence of congress and the American people. There is grave danger of disillusionment turning into cynicism, unless it can be made clear that the American point of view, which at best is none too clearly defined, is not exclusive and not absolute. Among the United Nations, the United States is only one of many countries which hope to build a more secure future. It properly expects the others to give in to it on some details, just as they properly expect it to give in to them on other details. But it is not exclusively endowed with absolute wisdom.

Dramatic Story About a Surgeon

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

MODERN surgery came to maturity just 80 years ago, in the spring of 1865 in the ancient and very Scotch city of Glasgow, when the young and newly appointed

he did not know, the control of which completely baffled him.

We know now, of course, that it was due to the entrance in the wound of germs, which are everywhere in the air, on the instruments he uses, on the ligatures, dressings, hands of operator and assistants. These can be destroyed by boiling the instruments, sterilizing the dressings, and cleansing the hands and the patient's skin, but of that our surgeons of 1865 were entirely unaware.

Experience With Garbage

Professor Dr. Joseph Lister, found that he could stop putrefaction, or surgical gangrene, by the application of carbolic acid to surgical wounds.

To memorialize the anniversary there has been published a biography of Joseph Lister, Father of Modern Surgery, by Rhoda Truax (Published by Bobbs-Merrill Co.). It is the first popular full length biography of Lister designed to be understood and read by the layman. The story it tells must surely be of vital interest to every modern man and woman.

I did not say that modern surgery was born under Lister's direction. I said it came to maturity. The most important problem of surgery was to render the patient insensitive to pain during an operation—anesthesia. That was also the subject of an anniversary last month with the celebration of Horace Wells' use of nitrous oxide, or laughing gas. But we described that yesterday.

Control of Infection

It is difficult for a modern to realize the condition in 1865 before Lister's discovery. Surgeons had learned to control haemorrhage and they could put patients to sleep for surgical procedure. Ether, nitrous oxide and chloroform had all been introduced. But whenever the surgeon's knife touched a part of the body, infection occurred—suppuration, the formation of pus and finally gangrene—hospital gangrene it was called.

No surgeon in those days dared open an abdomen, a chest, a brain cavity, dared operate on disease at all—only accidents and wounds. All the hundreds of helpful operations that have been done every morning this week in the hundreds of hospitals in our country were forbidden him. The help that any of my readers may be contemplating from a surgical operation was then not a matter of choice—it was utterly forbidden.

When a patient came in with a crushed leg from an accident, when in the just finished American Civil war a man was wounded by a bullet, the surgeon operated and took a chance, but he did it in full knowledge that it might end fatally from infection, the cause of which forbidden.

Joan's Lawyer May Ask For New Trial

(By Associated Press)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 5 — Joan Berry's lawyers planned to file a motion today for an early new trial of her suit contending Charlie Chaplin is the father of her 15-month-old daughter.

"I have just begun to fight," said her attorney, Joseph Scott, when a deadlocked jury was dismissed yesterday. It stood at 7 to 5 in favor of a verdict finding that the 55-year-old film funnyman did not beget Joan's baby Carol Ann.

Chaplin had no comment. He was confined to his home by a bad cut on his ankle, incurred Saturday night when he forgot his keys and kicked in a glass door panel to enter his house.

Miss Berry, surprised, said "Oh, oh. I'm sorry."

Charles E. Millikan, lawyer for the actor-producer, observed:

"I'm disappointed with the verdict . . . but it was quite a triumph for the truth when a majority of the jury refused to be swayed by passion or prejudice.

The trial wound up without the drama that marked the conclusion of Chaplin's Mann act trial last spring. A shouting crowd milled about him then, pumping his hand, when a federal jury acquitted him of transporting Joan to and from New York for immoral purposes.

are bulldogging their way southward on a 17-mile front in a howling blizzard, and the temperature flirting with zero. The Germans have been resisting stubbornly, and Allied progress has been achieved with a maximum effort. During the first two days Hodges dented the enemy line three and a half miles or more in places.

If both Hodges and Patton are able to continue their progress it may mean that the decisive phase of the battle will come near the center of the bulge when the American forces have joined or are close to a junction. It may take long, hard fighting before that is achieved.

It will be clear that this conflict of the bulge is going to be costly in lives. An Allied estimate places the German casualties at some 60,000, since Von Rundstedt launched his drive. The Germans say the Allies have lost far more than 50,000. However that may be, we must be prepared to get bad news when the official figures of our casualties are available.

Joan's Lawyer May Ask For New Trial

(By Associated Press)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 5 — Joan Berry's lawyers planned to file a motion today for an early new trial of her suit contending Charlie Chaplin is the father of her 15-month-old daughter.

"I have just begun to fight," said her attorney, Joseph Scott, when a deadlocked jury was dismissed yesterday. It stood at 7 to 5 in favor of a verdict finding that the 35-year-old film funnyman did not beget Joan's baby Carol Ann.

Chaplin had no comment. He was confined to his home by a bad cut on his ankle, incurred Saturday night when he forgot his keys and kicked in a glass door panel to enter his house.

Miss Berry, surprised, said "Oh, oh. I'm sorry."

Charles E. Millikan, lawyer for the actor-producer, observed:

"I'm disappointed with the verdict . . . but it was quite a triumph for the truth when a majority of the jury refused to be swayed by passion or prejudice.

The trial wound up without the drama that marked the conclusion of Chaplin's Mann act trial last spring. A shouting crowd milled about him then, pumping his hand, when a federal jury acquitted him of transporting Joan to and from New York for immoral purposes.

are bulldogging their way southward on a 17-mile front in a howling blizzard, and the temperature flirting with zero. The Germans have been resisting stubbornly, and Allied progress has been achieved with a maximum effort. During the first two days Hodges dented the enemy line three and a half miles or more in places.

If both Hodges and Patton are able to continue their progress it may mean that the decisive phase of the battle will come near the center of the bulge when the American forces have joined or are close to a junction. It may take long, hard fighting before that is achieved.

It will be clear that this conflict of the bulge is going to be costly in lives. An Allied estimate places the German casualties at some 60,000 since Von Rundstedt launched his drive. The Germans say the Allies have lost far more than 50,000. However that may be, we must be prepared to get bad news when the official figures of our casualties are available.

After attending the airplane mechanic school in Lincoln, Neb., and the United States Barber school, he entered the Army Air Force Administration school in Miami, Fla., and was commissioned a second lieutenant on April 16, 1943. Soon after earning his bars, he left the United States for India.

Activities of the base in India were brought to light in a recent article in Life magazine: "Born out of confusion and chaos, it barnstormed its way to maturity and now performs its missions with a streamlined efficiency that has profound significance for the postwar world."

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO
 "Why don't you try getting starry-eyed over molecules?" suggested Daphne solemnly.

"I have," said Buff, "but that's not what's burning me up. Let me tell you . . . Steve and Perry and I were alone in their study. Steve tells Perry about something he's doing and my hero says he wants to see it, so Steve says will he come around tonight. 'Get it?'

"Yes, and no. Steve is very close to discovering something wonderful and . . ."

"I don't care if he's discovered six new moons! The point is that tonight is Perry's only night off. So I chipped up and said, 'He can't be taking me skating.' Then Perry gets all grandpappy and says, 'What do you think of her, sir? Isn't she cute?' and Steve, in that far-away-oh-so-polite voice says, 'Very!'

"Well! I got mad and said, 'What have you got against me?' And he says, 'Nothing, my dear.'

Daphne locked at her watch again. "I've got to go, Buff. Maybe I can have a little talk with Steve today, but I think you've dreamed it up."

"I have not! Ask him as soon as you get there, and I'll be waiting when you get home."

Daphne promised.

When she got to the lab, Steve was waiting for her and she sensed excitement in the air. "Come here," he said at once, "I want you to look at something, Daphne."

She bent over the microscope. "That?" she asked, sighting a wriggling object.

"That unimaginably tiny spherical particle is" — he paused dramatically — "the flu virus."

Daphne stared at the speck with renewed respect.

"Did I ever tell you about the Hemophilus influenzae?"

"No."

"At the last meeting of the Society of American Bacteriologists, it was reported . . . Steve was off and Daphne was so entranced that she forgot all about Buff and her promise, and it wasn't until it was dark, and she was washing up, that she remembered."

"Steve, let's have a heart-to-heart talk about Buff and Perry. And don't try to get out of it. They're kids and I think they're in love . . . You don't want them to be, do you?"

He laughed a little drily. "That's one of those things . . . kids can't do anything about, I guess. But, Buff . . ."

"You don't approve of her?"

"She's a pretty child and quite charming, I think. But, look, you don't know anything about young Dawson. I do Perry's a born scientist. Scientists don't have much time to think of . . . of love."

"Don't they?" she asked interestedly.

"They oughtn't to. Not marriage anyway. Not when they haven't any money. Perry Dawson hasn't. It may be years before he makes it."

"Well!" she rolled her sleeves down and snapped her cuff with a smart click. "You're way ahead of me. We seem to be talking about different things."

"I don't think so. Buff is head-over-heels in love with him. She's attractive, and she's dangerous."

"So is a canary."

"Suppose Dawson is really in love with her?"

"Suppose he is?" she asked hotly. "Is the laboratory a monastery?"

He smiled. "Hardly, but please excuse my seeming dramatic when I assure you that science matters more to men like me, and Dawson, than anything else. We're hunters. Daphne. We're after big game. We have a fever. Once a man goes after bugs, that's what he has to do all his life. Nothing should stand in the way of it . . . Aside entirely from the fact that a great scientist may be lost to mankind, there is the lesser fact that a scientist diverted from his purpose, or distracted in it, may make himself and his unfortunate wife a couple of wretchedly unhappy people."

"So, I take it, all a scientist needs

nothing to be sorry about now. It is better this way. We were two elements that do not mix or stay mixed. She has what she wants now, among other things a husband and family in Texas, and I have my laboratory."

"But there is something to be sad about," Daphne said thoughtfully. "Something that's happened to you, I think. It's something I feel. You man couldn't ask anything more of life than a good wife to share it. But we were talking about our young friends. How can they marry? The girl is rich. Dawson isn't."

"Buff has money of her own."

Something flashed across Steve's face and he got up and went to stand with his back to the hearth. The black look lingered in his eyes as he declared, "Do you think he's the kind of a lad who'd let his wife support him? Do you think she would be content to have him spend most of his waking hours for the rest of his life in a laboratory?"

"I don't know," Daphne said honestly. "But when a woman loves a man—"

"I can finish it for you. She wants to help her husband. She wants him to use all his talents, and be recognized, and have fun before he's too old. Slowly, surely, she begins to mold him. He becomes famous. He yanks tonsils, or weighs babies, or gets a reputation as a great surgeon. Maybe because he wears striped pants he'll get ten times what a good general practitioner gets. They don't live on his wife's money any more. He's rich now. His wife has done it all for him. He's probably a lot healthier, too, because he plays golf and tennis. The only thing he's lost is his scientific soul."

It was very quiet when Steve finished. Daphne watched a log fall apart in a shower of sparks, and then said softly, "You know, don't you, from experience?"

"Yes," he said, "I know." His teeth were hard on the stem of his pipe. "I knew a girl like Buff once. Even prettier. Her hair was pale, more like silver than gold, her voice made me think of cool water. She was soft, and sweet . . . It was summer. I was waiting on table at a club where she and her father were guests. I was just a kid with another year to go at medical school."

I didn't have much money, but I didn't want anything more than I have now. She had everything. I'd never seen a butler in real life until I was invited to her place. He scared me off. I ran away."

"And she came and got you?"

"She did. I guess it wasn't very hard. When a woman wants to make a man think that luxuries and parties mean nothing to her, she knows how to do it. Eh?"

Daphne made no reply.

"They didn't mean too much to Elaine. Not in the beginning, but she got bored after while, as all women do. Lonely, too, I guess."

"You loved her and didn't want her to be lonely," Daphne said, as if they were reading from the same memory page.

"That's about it. I didn't like living on her money, but I couldn't ask her to live on mine, so"—he shrugged—"it wasn't her fault."

"What did you do?"

"Went in practice with her uncle. Nice old chap. It was fourteen years before I . . . I got back into my own element."

"You left her?"

"I'm sorry, Steve."

He smiled his slow smile. "There's nothing to be sorry about now. It is better this way. We were two elements that do not mix or stay mixed. She has what she wants now, among other things a husband and family in Texas, and I have my laboratory."

"But there is something to be said about," Daphne said thoughtfully. "Something that's happened to you. I think it's something I feel. You had back from . . . even from friendship with women. Steve," she said abruptly, "you don't trust me, do you?"

"I have made you feel that way? I'm sorry."

"Oh, Steve," she urged, "let's—"

A sharp knock at the door stopped her from saying what would have been so important to them, and to others.

It was Kate Dennison who waited at the door, and she said at once, "Dr. Fenwick, I need you right away. Mrs. Romero has had a heart attack. Dr. McIntosh is delivering a baby and Dr. Friedman is ill. I couldn't get—"

"Be right with you."

"Take my car, Steve, and when you bring it back, you can tell me if there's anything I can do," Daphne offered.

"Don't wait up for me," he said when she got out at her house.

WARN'S MOTORISTS
ON DEADLY FUMES

Each year a number of Ohio car owners fail to recognize the deadliness of carbon monoxide gas and are found dead in their cars, according to Albert P. Morris, manager of the Columbiana County Motor club.

Warming up a cold motor is necessary before starting to drive, but doing it with the garage doors closed is flirting with trouble. Carbon monoxide is particularly dangerous because it is colorless, tasteless and odorless and affects the motorist before he realizes it's presence.

Rusty exhaust pipes and mufflers full of pinpoint holes may let fumes containing carbon monoxide up through the floor boards, and it is

Joan's Lawyer May Ask For New Trial

(By Associated Press)

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 5 — Joan Berry's lawyers planned to file a motion today for an early new trial of her suit contending Charlie Chaplin is the father of her 15-month-old daughter.

"I have just begun to fight," said her attorney, Joseph Scott, when a deadlocked jury was dismissed yesterday. It stood at 7 to 5 in favor of a verdict finding that the 55-year-old film funnyman did not beget Joan's baby Carol Ann.

Chaplin had no comment. He was confined to his home by a bad cut on his ankle, incurred Saturday night when he forgot his keys and kicked in a glass door panel to enter his house.

Miss Berry, surprised, said "Oh, oh. I'm sorry."

Charles E. Millikan, lawyer for the actor-producer, observed:

"I'm disappointed with the verdict . . . but it was quite a triumph for the truth when a majority of the jury refused to be swayed by passion or prejudice."

The trial wound up without the drama that marked the conclusion of Chaplin's Mann act trial last spring. A shouting crowd milled about him then, pumping his hand, when a federal jury acquitted him of transporting Joan to and from New York for immoral purposes.

are bulldogging their way southward on a 17-mile front in a howling blizzard, and the temperature flirting with zero. The Germans have been resisting stubbornly, and Allied progress has been achieved with a maximum effort. During the first two days Hodges dented the enemy line three and a half miles or more in places.

If both Hodges and Patton are able to continue their progress it may mean that the decisive phase of the battle will come near the center of the bulge when the American forces have joined or are close to a junction. It may take long, hard fighting before that is achieved.

It will be clear that this conflict of the bulge is going to be costly in lives. An Allied estimate places the German casualties at some 60,000 since Von Rundstedt launched his drive. The Germans say the Allies have lost far more than 50,000. However that may be, we must be prepared to get bad news when the official figures of our casualties are available.

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO
 "Why don't you try getting starry-eyed over molecules?" suggested Daphne solemnly.

"I have," said Buff, "but that's not what's burning me up. Let me tell you . . . Steve and Perry and I were alone in their study. Steve tells Perry about something he's doing and my hero says he wants to see it, so Steve says will he come around tonight. 'Get it?'

"Yes, and no. Steve is very close to discovering something wonderful and . . ."

"I don't care if he's discovered six new moons! The point is that tonight is Perry's only night off. So I chipped up and said, 'He can't be taking me skating.' Then Perry gets all grandpappy and says, 'What do you think of her, sir? Isn't she cute?' and Steve, in that far-away-oh-so-polite voice says, 'Very.'

"Well! I got mad and said, 'What have you got against me?' And he says, 'Nothing, my dear.'

Daphne looked at her watch again. "I've got to go, Buff. Maybe I can have a little talk with Steve today, but I think you've dreamed it up."

"I have not! Ask him as soon as you get there, and I'll be waiting when you get home."

Daphne promised.

When she got to the lab, Steve was waiting for her and she sensed excitement in the air. "Come here," he said at once. "I want you to look at something, Daphne."

She bent over the microscope.

"That?" she asked, sighting a wriggling object.

"That unimaginably tiny spherical particle is — he paused dramatically — the flu virus."

Daphne stared at the speck with renewed respect.

"Did I ever tell you about the Hemophilus influenzae?"

"No."

"At the last meeting of the Society of American Bacteriologists, it was reported . . . Steve was off and Daphne was so entranced that she forgot all about Buff and her promise, and it wasn't until it was dark, and she was washing up, that she remembered.

"Steve, let's have a heart-to-heart talk about Buff and Perry. And don't try to get out of it. They're kids and I think they're in love . . . You don't want them to be, do you?"

He laughed a little dryly. "That's one of those things . . . kids can't do anything about, I guess. But, Buff . . ."

"You don't approve of her?"

"She's a pretty child and quite charming. I think. But, look, you don't know anything about young Dawson. I do Perry's a born scientist. Scientists don't have much time to think of . . . of love."

"Don't they?" she asked interestingly.

"They oughtn't to. Not marriage anyway. Not when they haven't any money. Perry Dawson hasn't. It may be years before he makes it."

"Well!" she rolled her sleeves down and snapped her cuff with a smart click. "You're way ahead of me. We seem to be talking about different things."

"I don't think so. Buff is head-over-heels in love with him. She's attractive, and she's dangerous."

"So is a canary."

"Suppose Dawson is really in love with her?"

"Suppose he is?" she asked hotly.

"Is the laboratory a monastery?"

He smiled. "Hardly, but please excuse my seeming dramatic when I assure you that science matters more to men like me, and Dawson, than anything else. We're hunters. Daphne. We're after big game. We have a fever. Once a man goes after bugs, that's what he has to do all his life. Nothing should stand in the way of it . . . Aside entirely from the fact that a great scientist may be lost to mankind, there is the lesser fact that a scientist diverted from his purpose, or distracted in it, may make himself and his unfortunate wife a couple of wretchedly unhappy people."

"So, I take it, all a scientist needs

nothing to be sorry about now. It is better this way. We were two elements that do not mix or stay mixed. She has what she wants now, among other things a husband and family in Texas, and I have my laboratory."

"But there is something to be said about it," Daphne said thoughtfully. "Something that's happened to you, I think. It's something I feel. You hold back from . . . even from friendship with women. Steve," she said abruptly, "you don't trust me, do you?"

"Have I made you feel that way? I'm sorry."

"Oh, Steve," she urged, "let's —" A sharp knock at the door stopped her from saying what would have been so important to them, and to others.

It was Kate Dennison who waited at the door, and she said at once, "Dr. Fenwick, I need you right away. Mrs. Romero had a heart attack. Dr. McIntosh is delivering a baby and Dr. Friedman is ill. I couldn't get —"

"Be right with you."

"Take my car, Steve, and when you bring it back, you can tell me if there's anything I can do," Daphne offered.

"Don't wait up for me," he said when she got out at her house.

WARN'S MOTORISTS
ON DEADLY FUMES

Each year a number of Ohio car owners fail to recognize the deadliness of carbon monoxide gas and are found dead in their cars, according to Albert P. Morris, manager of the Columbiana County Motor club.

Warming up a cold motor is necessary before starting to drive, but doing it with the garage doors closed is flirting with trouble. Carbon monoxide is particularly dangerous because it is colorless, tasteless and odorless and affects the motorist before he realizes it's present.

Rusty exhaust pipes and mufflers full of pinpoint holes may let fumes containing carbon monoxide up through the floor boards, and it is

by MARIE BLIZARD

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO
"Why don't you try getting starry-eyed over molecules?" suggested Daphne solemnly.
"I have," said Buff, "but that's not what's burning me up. Let me tell you . . . Steve and Perry and I were alone in their study. Steve tells Perry about something he's doing and my hero says he wants to see it, so Steve says will he come around tonight. Get it?"

"Yes, and no. Steve is very close to discovering something wonderful and . . ."

"I don't care if he's discovered six new moons! The point is that tonight is Perry's only night off. So I chipped up and said, 'He can't be taking me skating.' Then Perry gets all grandpappy and says, 'What do you think of her, sir? Isn't she cute?' and Steve, in that far-away-oh-so-polite voice says, 'Very!'"

"Well! I got mad and said, 'What have you got against me?' And he says, 'Nothing, my dear!'"

Daphne looked at her watch again. "I've got to go. Buff. Maybe I can have a little talk with Steve today, but I think you've dreamed it up."

"I have not! Ask him as soon as you get there, and I'll be waiting when you get home."

Daphne promised.

When she got to the lab, Steve was waiting for her and she sensed excitement in the air. "Come here," he said at once. "I want you to look at something, Daphne."

She bent over the microscope.

"That?" she asked, sighting a wriggling object.

"That's unimaginably tiny spherical particle is"—he paused dramatically—"the flu virus."

Daphne stared at the speck with renewed respect.

"Did I ever tell you about the Hemophilus influenzae?"

"No."

"At the last meeting of the Society of American Bacteriologists, it was reported . . . Steve was off and Daphne was so entranced that she forgot all about Buff and her promise, and it wasn't until it was dark and she was washing up, that she remembered.

"Steve, let's have a heart-to-heart talk about Buff and Perry. And don't try to get out of it. They're kids and I think they're in love . . . You don't want them to be, do you?"

He laughed a little drily. "That's one of those things . . . kids can't do anything about, I guess. But, Buff . . ."

"You don't approve of her?"

"She's a pretty child and quite charming, I think. But, look, you don't know anything about young Dawson. I do Perry's a born scientist. Scientists don't have much time to think of . . . of love."

"Don't they?" she asked interestingly.

"They oughtn't to. Not marriage anyway. Not when they haven't any money. Perry Dawson hasn't. It may be years before he makes it."

"Well!" she rolled her sleeves down and snapped her cuff with a smart click. "You're way ahead of me. We seem to be talking about different things."

"I don't think so. Buff is head-over-heels in love with him. She's attractive, and she's dangerous."

"So is a canary."

"Suppose Dawson is really in love with her?"

"Suppose he is?" she asked hotly.

"Is the laboratory a monastery?"

He smiled. "Hardly, but please excuse my seeming dramatic when I assure you that science matters more to men like me, and Dawson, than anything else. We're hunters. Daphne. We're after big game. We have a fever. Once a man goes after bugs, that's what he has to do all his life. Nothing should stand in the way of it."

"Aside entirely from the fact that a great scientist may be lost to mankind, there is the lesser fact that a scientist diverted from his purpose, or distracted in it, may make himself and his unfortunate wife a couple of wretchedly unhappy people."

"So, I take it, all a scientist needs

nothing to be sorry about now. It is better this way. We were two elements that do not mix or stay mixed. She has what she wants now, among other things a husband and family in Texas, and I have my laboratory."

"But there is something to be sad about," Daphne said thoughtfully. "Something that's happened to you, I think. It's something I feel. You mean to make it sound that way. A man couldn't ask anything more of life than a good wife to share it. But we were talking about our young friends. How can they marry? The girl is rich. Dawson isn't."

"Buff has money of her own."

Something flashed across Steve's face and he got up and went to stand with his back to the hearth. The black look lingered in his eyes as he declared, "Do you think he's the kind of a lad who'd let his wife support him? Do you think she would be content to have him spend most of his waking hours for the rest of his life in a laboratory?"

"I don't know," Daphne said honestly. "But when a woman loves a man—"

"I can finish it for you. She wants to help her husband. She wants him to use all his talents, and be recognized, and have fun before he's too old. Slowly, surely, she begins to mold him. He becomes famous. He yanks tonsils, or weighs babies, or gets a reputation as a great surgeon. Maybe because he wears striped pants he'll get ten times what a good general practitioner gets. They don't live on his wife's money any more. He's rich now. His wife has done it all for him. He's probably a lot healthier, too, because he plays golf and tennis. The only thing he's lost is his scientific soul."

It was very quiet when Steve finished. Daphne watched a log fall apart in a shower of sparks, and then said softly, "You know, don't you, from experience?"

"Yes," he said. "I know." His teeth were hard on the stem of his pipe. "I knew a girl like Buff once. Even prettier. Her hair was pale, more like silver than gold, her voice made me think of cool water. She was soft, and sweet . . . It was summer. I was waiting on table at a club where she and her father were guests. I was just a kid with another year to go at medical school. I didn't have much money, but I didn't want anything more than I have now. She had everything. I'd never seen a butler in real life until I was invited to her place. He scared me off. I ran away."

"And she came and got you?"

"She did. I guess it wasn't very hard. When a woman wants to make a man think that luxuries and parties mean nothing to her, she knows how to do it. Eh?"

Daphne made no reply.

"They didn't mean too much to Elaine. Not in the beginning, but she got bored after a while, as all women do. Lonely, too, I guess."

"You loved her and didn't want her to be lonely," Daphne said, as if they were reading from the same memory page.

"That's about it. I didn't like living on her money, but I couldn't ask her to live on mine, so—" he shrugged—"it wasn't her fault."

"What did you do?"

"Went in practice with her uncle. Nice old chap. It was fourteen years before I . . . I got back into my own element."

"I'm sorry, Steve."

He smiled his slow smile. "There's nothing to be sorry about now. It is better this way. We were two elements that do not mix or stay mixed. She has what she wants now, among other things a husband and family in Texas, and I have my laboratory."

WARNERS MOTORISTS
ON DEADLY FUMES

Each year a number of Ohio car owners fail to recognize the deadliness of carbon monoxide gas and are found dead in their cars, according to Albert P. Morris, manager of the Columbiana County Motor club.

Warming up a cold motor is necessary before starting to drive, but doing it with the garage doors closed is flirting with trouble. Carbon monoxide is particularly dangerous because it is colorless, tasteless and odorless and affects the motorist before he realizes its presence.

Rusty exhaust pipes and mufflers with pinpoint holes may let fumes containing carbon monoxide up through the floor boards, and it is

Athletics To Open Basketball Season At Memorial Tonight

MEET ALLIANCE TRANSUE TEAM

Contest Slated At 8 As Salem's Only Class 'A' Team Opens

Members of the Salem Athletic club—the same outfit that fielded the city's only baseball team last summer—have organized, practiced and scheduled a basketball team, the only Class A outfit in the city this year.

Opening their season at 8 tonight at the Memorial building, the Athletics will take on a war-worker manned Transue-Williams club from Alliance's Class A loop. The battle looms as a hot one.

Made up of veterans from the baseball team and specialists in cage lines, the outfit representing Salem stacks up as a classy club.

Manning the team tonight will be Al Catos, Gordy Sculion, Mike Hippolyte, Mike Linder, John Trombitas, Don Biddle, John Koza, Al Kent, Danny Kenst and Bob "Buck" Ritchie.

Played In Alumni Test

The majority of the Athletics took part in the Salem High-Alumni game the other night. Finding the students too fast for them, the Athletics feel sure their offense and defense will be more effective against the Alliance club, which is made up of men more of the same age.

Highest point-getter in the test Tuesday was "Buck" Ritchie, who previously played basketball and baseball at Denison University. Ritchie also played reserve basketball in the High school and was a member of Joe Kelley's American Legion baseball team several years ago.

The club plans games once or twice each week, with most of the contests coming on weekends. However, Sponsor Scott Chisholm said games will be booked whenever the High school team is not playing here.

Sport Chatter

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—When Branch Rickey was testing the reactions of newspapermen the other day he came out quite strongly in favor of the appointment of a national sports co-ordinator. As a confirmed "anti-ccar" guy, we can't see where he advanced any good arguments except that during these uncertain times a co-ordinator could deal better with other agencies in Washington.

Such matters as proper physical examinations for High school athletes and territorial disputes could easily be handled by existing governing bodies, which would be eliminated or reduced to unimportance if a new bureaucracy were set up. We can't think of any man whose knowledge could encompass all the details of, say, the baseball farm systems and scoring a figure skating competition.

IS THIS CONSISTENT?

Rickey says he has a candidate (not identified) for the sports co-ordinator's job and then, urging immediate appointment of a baseball commissioner, he refuses to make any nominations. It seems from here that any guy who could supervise all sports could handle the baseball job with one hand—he'd have to.

SPORTS BEFORE YOUR EYES

Jimmy Doyle, the California welterweight just signed to fight Frankie Terry in the Garden next week, started boxing in Jim Jeffries' amateur shows at Burbank, Calif., and took lessons in feinting and ducking from Jack Johnson.

Fritz Zivic contends the record books are wrong in listing less than 200 fights for him. "It's 298—well, more than 200—make it 300, that's a good round figure" says Fritz.

GIRLS FEED SQUAD A PRE-GAME DIET

NEW ORLEANS—Now football's a pretty important thing to the students of Francis T. Nicholls High school in New Orleans, and the coach didn't like the way his charges were taking to the field sort of logey, particularly during Sunday games.

The girls in the home-making class heard about it. The result: four hours before each game the 40-mouthed squad of double-order specialists gets a carefully defatted meal—with tea and lemon.

The menu: one well-boiled potato, one broiled veal chop (broiled dry), two pieces of dry, hard toast and limitless quantities of hot tea flavored with lemon and very little sugar. There's water, iceless, for a chaser.

Coach William Seiber can now confine his worries to strategy.

GRID LEAGUE TOYS WITH RULE CHANGES

Suggest Abolishing Extra Point and Playing Off Game Ties

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—The National Football league is toying with the idea of abolishing the extra point try after touchdown and adopting the "sudden death" method of ending deadlocks.

Both innovations are included among 21 rules changes recommended by officials and coaches for consideration at the league's annual winter meeting here Jan. 9 and 10. George Strickler, league publicity director, explained the "sudden death" recommendation calls for overtime periods of 15 minutes duration with the contest to end when the first touchdown, field goal or safety is made.

Might Boost Injury

Strickler added, however, that some league officials believe the proposed changes would result in increased injuries as players became more and more exhausted in overtime play. Two of last season's three tied games complicated Eastern division standings since deadlocked games are not reckoned in the standings.

Other officials said the extra point try wasted some two minutes of playing time after each touchdown and meant little in the touch-down-conscious play-for-pay loop. The overtime rule now is in effect for playoffs of divisional ties, but never has been invoked.

BIG LEAGUE MOGULS CONSIDERING RULES, NEW COMMISSION

Successor To Landis Gets Attention At Chicago Meeting Today

(By Associated Press)

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—The drafting of a new major league agreement to govern baseball's future and to outline authority of a commissioner who will succeed the late K. M. Landis today occupied the two big league presidents and eight club officials.

Although not authorized to consider the naming of Landis' successor, the committee's business is to lay the groundwork for that assignment, which will rest with the officials of all 16 clubs.

The committee's business will be revising the previous 25-year big league pact which would have expired on Jan. 12, 1946, but which was terminated upon Landis' death last Nov. 25.

Will Tone Down Authority

A toning down of authority vested in the commissioner's office is expected to be included in the committee's decision, which must be adopted by a majority of the 16 club owners. It probably will be submitted at the majors' final meeting in New York next month by the committee—league Presidents Ford Frick and Will Harridge and four officials from each league.

Following adoption of the agreement will come the naming of a new commissioner—a post reported to have drawn a host of candidates. The new pact is expected to include the commissioner's salary—probably not as much as $65,000 which Landis received—and may be limited to 10 years instead of 25.

P. K. Wrigley, owner-president of the Chicago Cubs, and a committee member, said: "There should be a set of specifications drawn which will say just what the commissioner has jurisdiction over."

The Cavaliers, fighting hard to stay in the second place running, topped hapless Washingtonville in a battle 34-27. Unable to make their lead impressive at any time, the Cavaliers did manage to stay on the right end of the score most of the time. Johnnie Pozniki tallied 13 for the winners and J. Driscoll again led the losers with 11 points.

The summaries:

WASHINGTONVILLE G. F. T.
Adams 1 0 2
J. Driscoll 3 5 11
Grindie 4 1 9
D. Driscoll 1 0 2

GRID LEAGUE TOYS WITH RULE CHANGES

Suggest Abolishing Extra Point and Playing Off Game Ties

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—The National Football league is toying with the idea of abolishing the extra point after touchdown and adopting the "sudden death" method of ending deadlocks.

Both innovations are included among 21 rules changes recommended by officials and coaches for consideration at the league's annual winter meeting here Jan. 9 and 10.

George Strickler, league publicity director, explained the "sudden death" recommendation calls for overtime periods of 15 minutes duration with the contest to end when the first touchdown, field goal or safety is made.

Might Boost Injury

Strickler added, however, that some league officials believe the proposed changes would result in increased injuries as players became more and more exhausted in overtime play. Two of last season's three tied games complicated Eastern division standings since deadlocked games are not reckoned in the standings.

Other officials said the extra point try wasted some two minutes of playing time after each touchdown and meant little in the touch-down-census play-for-pay loop.

The overtime rule now is in effect for playoffs of divisional ties, but never has been invoked.

Big Ten Basketball Race Gets In Full Swing Today

BY JERRY LISK

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—If you like figures beyond the pin-up variety, you have to hand Iowa's Hawkeyes the Big Ten basketball title on a silver adding machine.

As the 1945 Conference field goes to the post this weekend, Coach Lawrence (Pops) Harrison's Iowans boast the only perfect pre-season record and a staggering average of 73 points in six victories.

The Buckeyes have lost two of their seven starts, yet boast better than a 53-point average, a shade less than Illinois' (5-2) and Northwestern's (3-1) 55-point average.

The campaign, informally launched last Saturday with a 44-36 win over Michigan, picks up tonight as Indiana invades Michigan and roars into full speed Saturday night with four games—Minnesota at Iowa, Michigan at Illinois, Northwestern at Wisconsin, and Ohio at Purdue.

It's hard to see how Iowa can miss surging home on top this season. The Hawkeyes average almost 6 feet, 4 inches and have five seasoned performers, paced by Dick Ives, 1944 Conference scoring champ. Ives has scored 89 points this season in six games and has brilliant support in Co-Captains Jack Spencer and Ned Postels, and a stellar brother pair from the University of Utah, Herb and Clayton Wilkinson.

However, don't be surprised if the Hawkeyes find their hands full every inch of the way. Their 438-point performance to date was accomplished against relatively easy pickings, Notre Dame excepted.

Three rivals are potential trouble-makers of the first water—Ohio State, Illinois and Northwestern—while Michigan and Wisconsin fit into the dark horse bracket.

The Buckeyes Wednesday night won their fifth contest of the season, beating the Wyoming Cowboys 44-36, the eighth straight defeat for the Westerners. Forward Don Grate paced the Ohio State attack with 16 points to give him a scoring count of 109 in seven games.

LUTHERAN CHURCH
OFFICERS CHOSEN

The annual meeting of Holy Trinity English Lutheran church was held Wednesday evening when reports of officers, church organizations and the pastor were presented.

The following were elected members of the church council for terms of three years: J. A. Fehr, J. Elmer Johnson and Olin K. Muntz. Other elections were: Church organist, Miss Ruth Hoch; 1st assistant, Mrs. Calia Greenisen; 2nd assistant, Miss Rachel Keister.

The pastor's report disclosed 28 new members received, 14 children baptized; 921 persons given the holy communion; 19 funerals conducted; 62 sermons preached; eight weddings solemnized; 917 pastoral calls made; average attendance of Sunday school, 147; average attendance of church services, 145.

The congregation has been placed on the honor roll of congregations of the Lutheran Synod of Ohio because of its contributions and support of the benevolence and missionary work.

The congregation became debt-free the past year and action was taken to expand the building facilities to provide additional room for church and Sunday school activities and that a reredos for the church altar and panelings in the sanctuary be provided.

The newly-elected church council will be installed Sunday. The celebration of the sacrament of the holy communion will be held Jan. 14.
